Orientation on 'How to Choose MBA Specialization.?'

Often the students of MBA get disordered while opting the specialization at the MBA Part II. Choosing MBA specialization is the crucial decision that the students have to make. Choosing MBA specialization is as important as the career. The decision about the specialization may make the career successful or it may cause suffering from several problems in the future.

The Master of Business Administration (MBA) programme is designed to equip students with a broad understanding of all aspects of operating a business, thereby allowing them to comprehensively upgrade their professional acumen and managerial ability. During the first few months of the MBA, students sit through courses covering a wide range of business functions, from finance to human resources. After acquiring this fundamental knowledge, you are then allowed to pursue specializations wherein students take dedicated courses in one or two domains and develop deep expertise in the process.

Although choosing an MBA specialization is majorly driven by your professional interests and career goals, students should also take into account factors such as the number of full-time and internships opportunities in that domain, salary packages, the business school's reputation for that field, and the quality of faculty and pedagogy on offer. Thus, despite not needing to make a final decision on their preferred MBA specialization until the later stages of the programme, prospective candidates are recommended to evaluate all the above criteria even before joining the Institute.

Faculty of MBA organized orientation on the given topic. The resource person was as follows.

ASHISH SINGH
Professor-Indian Institute of Technology (IIT), Bombay
School of Business Management

PARTH SHUKLA
CEO, Co-Founder and Subject Matter Expert at 9LedgePro - Microsoft Partner Network

These eminent personalities guided the students and interacted with them in such a way that all of the students' doubt got resolved.
